

As a NJ resident, I enjoy and respect our law as is. Do you not understand, I signed up for this privledge. My house has never been quieter. When I'm not well or in the middle of dinner, I don't have to hear the incessant ringing that I can't turn off because I have children or another important call. If I want contact/info from someone I have done business with in the last 18 months, I am able to contact them myself. As a United Stated citizen, I also do not feel it necessary to provide my e-mail address to the FCC, in order to make a comment. My name and address is sufficient. The inclusion of my e-mail address to your response requirements, which are open filings, makes me vulnerable through spam and unwanted e-mails to the same type over aggressive sellers, who have no respect for those who say no. Please think of the hard working people, who don't have someone to answer the phones like senators and representatives do or the time to listen to 6 messages on the answering machine before the all important, Mommy I need you to pick me up, now call or the emergency hospital/doctor call. Please think of the time limited people, who sit down at the computer to pay bills or search for something, but are interrupted by the same type of harrassment in spam and e-mails. This would be a great opportuntiy for the FCC to be a good example, whether to telephone or computer marketers, and say no means no. Certain 'free' United States citizens 'choose' to say leave me alone and their rights should be respected, yes, over big business.
